

Dear members of the FCC,
While I don't claim to have an inkling of the communication laws, compared to you, I can not understand under what circumstances XM radio should not be allowed to convey weather and traffic reports. This is greatly beneficial to travellers who can now get potentially important driving information, while driving, and sooner than from local stations. Why take away something that could possibly help make our travelling, both in and out of town, safer and easier?

Might big communication companies lose some listeners? Probably, then they can develop another system that's better, and people will flock to it. That is capitalism, right? We need more diversity in American media, not less! Please oppose HR 4026.

Thank you for your time and consideration,
